Jerry Stitt

Sunday, September 25

Jerry believes in the emotional use of color. He makes the colors flow together to create a mood. Jerry says it is important to simplify work to find the basic way to express an idea. He believes watercolor should look like it is melting; it is a fluid medium. Jerry is an elected member of the American Watercolor Society and the National Watercolor Society.

Joseph Stoddard

Saturday, October 22

Joseph is principal at SKA, an environmental graphic design firm in South Pasadena. He paints and sketches in a "you-are-here" documentary style. He has been featured in Artist's Sketchbook, American Artist Watercolor and American Artist's Watercolor Highlights and is the author of three books.

Sheila Hansberger

Saturday, November 5

Sheila is a Signature member of Watercolor West and National Watercolor Society. Although an article about her still lifes was featured in American Artist, flowers, people and places are competently handled subject matter also. Her work can be described as bright "high key" creations that often feature one of watercolor's most elusive techniques ... "negative painting."

George James

Saturday, December 3

George is a professor emeritus of art at California State University, Fullerton. By abandoning traditional methods of painting, he has discovered a new, creative watercolor process. As a result of this unique and original approach to watercolor painting, his most recent work has been recognized in major exhibitions and periodicals.

Keiko Tanabe

Sunday, December 18

Keiko has been painting landscapes and cityscapes since 2005. Primarily self-taught, she has already earned top awards on both national and international levels. She was recently featured in American Artist Watercolor, Watercolor Artist and Southwest Art.
